

Woman Supernaturally Healed of Depression: 'Jesus Stood in Front of Me in Person'

One night, Liz Wright cried out a desperate prayer, "God, if You're real, help me!" She went to sleep broken and woke up a completely new person. She was totally healed of clinical depression, which sent her on a spiritual journey. Some months later, in a moment where she cried out again, Liz says, "Jesus stood in front of me in person. As real as we physically are." He stripped away every shred of false identity from her past and imparted to her true identity.

In the debut episode of her show on the Charisma Podcast Network, Liz shares her incredible testimony as an injection of hope and empowerment to the body of Christ. As Liz so simply puts it, "Jesus is the solution to everything that you face in life." We are in a very difficult time in the world because of the coronavirus, yet Liz believes that we are coming into our finest hour, and "there will not be a trace of unbelief left in the body of Christ at the other side of this trial."

Liz desires to empower and lift us up into heaven's perspective, that we would come into a place of real connection with our ascended position in Christ and move out of any emotional reaction to the current situation. She explains that "The way we feel is a result of the collective life experiences that we walk through. Who we are is a completely different kettle of fish. Who we are is a new creation."

Just as God moved powerfully in Liz's life, He wants to answer the cry of your heart too. Jesus wants you to experience Him filling you with His life-transforming love and peace. "The testimony of Jesus, of what He's done in me, is the spirit of prophecy," Liz shares, "so right now is your invitation to really engage with Jesus."