

‘World’s Strongest Woman’ Winner Disqualified After Being Found to Be a Man

The last 10 or so years of transgender madness have resulted in at least one semi-positive development.

In short, we now understand from experience that people who abetted or celebrated diabolical lies helped enable history’s worst atrocities.

Tuesday on the social media platform Instagram, the Official Strongman Games issued a statement announcing the disqualification of Jammie Booker, a man posing as a woman, who won first place at the World Championships 2025 over the weekend in Arlington, Texas.

“It appears that an athlete who is biologically male and who now identifies as female competed in the Women’s Open category,” the statement read.

The statement added that athletes must compete in categories distinguished by “biological sex recorded at birth.”

“We are disappointed on behalf of all those who fairly and legitimately took part that the attention has been taken away from their efforts which deserve celebration, no matter how they performed or where they finished. We stand with them and stand with fairness,” the statement concluded.
