

Zac Brown Band's Devilish Deal: Demonic Imagery Overtakes Their Latest Show

Country music has now been infiltrated by the demonic.

The Zac Brown Band is facing heavy criticism after their Las Vegas residency show, "Love & Fear," portrayed blatant Satanic imagery, as Penn Live noted.

In a video shared to X from the concert, a giant skeleton wearing a spiked crown with images of fire whirling around the building. Brown himself wore a horned crown for the occasion as well, and the room was decorated with what appeared to be a Satanic statue of a fallen angel and skeletons everywhere in a dark and dreary room.

Another scene from the show depicts a person standing at a red door on fire, symbolizing this entrance into hell.

The post from Shadow of Ezra reads that, "Fans say the visuals plunged the audience into hellish scenes filled with demons, tortured souls, and imagery that included a crown resembling devil horns. Zac Brown says the show simply tells the story of his life and personal journey."

This show is just another marker of a major artist showing their allegiance to death, destruction and the devil, all the while pushing this type of imagery and agenda on their audience.

From the Grammys to films, TV, and streaming services, the enemy is no longer hiding. Instead, the world is openly embracing this violent and dark view. If something is not good, pure, noble, holy, and honorable, there is no reason to dwell on it. The lines between good and evil are clearly being drawn in the sand, and those who have fellowship with the darkness cannot be in fellowship with the Lord.

As we rush further along toward the end of time, we must choose who we are going to have fellowship with: God or Satan. We must hold onto the treasure of Christ and not let go of Him, no matter what we see happen in the world. The darkness may be mounting, but the light shines in the darkness, and the darkness has not overcome it. Choose to be part of God's light, revoking any friendship with what is dark.
