

2020 vs. 2024: Where Did All the Voters Go?

As the 2024 election has wrapped up, one of the stark differences people have noticed between the 2020 and the 2024 elections is the voter turnout rate.

In the 2020 presidential race, Joe Biden received 81.2 million votes and Donald Trump received 74.2 million votes. While the votes are still being calculated right now for the 2024 election, Donald Trump is sitting at about 73.5 million votes and Kamala Harris has around 69.2 million votes.

The discrepancy between Democratic votes from 2020 to 2024 is stark. That's a difference of at least 12 million voters who didn't show up for this year's election.

Looking at a graph circulating on social media that shows the contrast between the 2012, 2016, 2020 and 2024 elections, it's clear that something dramatically different happened in 2020 compared to every other year in the past 12 years.

In this scenario, the historic number of voters would have all been for Joe Biden, the same person who opted out of his re-election bid just a few months prior to the election. This means Biden would have completely squashed the voter turnout for Obama from 2012. Along with that, the Democratic Party seemed very certain that Harris was the kind of candidate they were looking for: A woman of color who upheld every ideology related to abortion and the LGBTQ+ movement. Celebrities like Taylor Swift and Oprah Winfrey gave her glowing praises. They seemed certain that she was the woman for the job.

But where were her supporters?

If Democratic voters really were going to come out in massive support for Harris this year, where were they?

Or, is it possible that the historic voter turnout from 2020 is now showing itself to be part of a stolen election?

Even with groups like the Amish coming out to vote, many for the very first time, and the large turnout of Latino voters for Trump, the total number of people who came out to vote in 2024 didn't touch 2020's number of voters if 81 million people truly did come out and vote for Biden.

Perhaps something fishy really did take place in 2020.

It also begs the question that perhaps some of the prophetic voices who saw Trump winning in 2020 were accurate, but other dark players were at work during this time. With all prophecies, we must use wisdom and discernment, seeking confirmation from God's Word and His Holy Spirit during our own time of prayer. However, if 2020 was actually a stolen election, it's quite possible then that some of these prophets were correct.

Now, as we move forward, let's pray for the truth to come to light, and for the Holy Spirit to do the work in America that we need for revival to spread.
