

'All Glory to God': Philadelphia Eagles Celebrate Super Bowl LIX Victory with Praise

After the Philadelphia Eagles defeated the Kansas City Chiefs in Super Bowl LIX, key fixtures in the year's biggest football game openly gave all the glory to God.

Case-in-point: Eagles Coach Nick Sirianni immediately credited the Lord while accepting the Lombardi Trophy on Sunday after his team's big 40-22 victory.

"All glory to God," Sirianni said.

And that's not all. The victorious coach also told Fox Sports reporter Tom Rinaldi that he and his team feel truly "blessed" and grateful for their talent and accomplishments.

"Thank God. Thank you Jesus."

"God's blessed us very much," Sirianni said. "He gave us all the talents to be able to get here, so first and foremost, thanks to Him. ... Thank God, thank You Jesus."

And Sirianni wasn't alone in looking above following the team's big win.

Eagles Quarterback Jalen Hurts, who was named the game's Most Valuable Player after completing two touchdowns and 17 of the 22 passes, also praised God for the victory.

"God is good—He's greater than all the highs and the lows," Hurts said as he took home the Pete Rozelle Trophy. "Couldn't be here without my teammates. The effort, the determination everybody displayed to get to this point."

Hurts' comment about the "highs and the lows" is one he's made before. In fact, leading up to Sunday's game, Sports Spectrum quoted him referencing this very statement while speaking about the importance of faith in his life.

"My faith has always been a part of me," he said. "I've always wanted to root myself in that and keep Him in the center of my life and everything that I do. So through the highs and the lows, He's greater than all of them, and that's something that I can always acknowledge."
