

America Recommits to God During Historic 250-Year Celebration

America has officially been rededicated to God.

In a special day of celebration of repentance, worship and turning back to the Lord, the Washington D.C. National Mall was turned into a massive prayer rally, all after President Trump declared that it would be a historic day of returning to the Lord.

On Saturday, Sean Feucht kicked off the weekend with a powerful worship and prayer event.

"...we stand here, not as the divided states, but as the United States," Feucht declared. "And we stand here as one body, as one church, as one bride, and we say, 'Jesus, come and have Your way in the United States of America.'"

Lou Engle also shared a dream with the crowd about Trump's election and the coming revival.

"I want you to declare a dream that I had," Engle said. "That the president was elected, and on this mall, there was a great gathering as far as you could see. And this people began chanting, 'Revival, revival...'"

As America marked 250 years of history, the gathering became far more than a patriotic celebration—it became a cry for awakening. In a moment filled with prayer, repentance and renewed hunger for the presence of God, many believed they were witnessing not just a commemoration of the past, but a spiritual turning point for the future.

At a time when America is facing moral confusion, cultural unrest and deep spiritual battles, believers across the country are increasingly sensing that revival is no longer just a hopeful idea—it is a desperate necessity.
