Back in 1994, Katharine became a member of the Roman Catholic Church and was "a volunteer for the Passage Night Shelter for the homeless," Fox reported.

As the BBC further noted, Katharine was the first person in the Royal Family to move into Catholicism since 1701.

Katharine was known for her heart to care for children and for music, which led her to take up a job as a music teacher, away from the life of nobility. Katharine was also known for presenting the Wimbledon Ladies' Singles trophies for years.
