

Anti-Fat Pastor Steve Reynolds: The Devil Tried to Kill Me This Weekend

Anti-fat pastor and author Steve Reynolds says it's a miracle he's still alive after a car wreck this weekend.

"I am alive today and that is a miracle of God!" the Bod4God author begins a Facebook post before detailing the harrowing near-death experience.

Reynolds says he's not one to typically point fingers at Satan but "I am 100% convinced that Thursday night the devil tried to kill my parents and me in a horrific car accident. I believe it was because of the Afterlife series I am doing at our church. I warned our church family at the beginning of this teaching series that the devil would be very upset about what I will be saying and we need be prepared to be attacked."

Here's what went down.

"A young man traveling at very high rate of speed totally ran through a stop sign and slammed into us (said he wasn't paying attention and his car ended up over 50 yards off the road). We never saw it coming at all. Unfortunately my wife and daughter were traveling right behind us and witnessed the whole thing and their normal first reaction was that we were probably not alive," he continues.

Reynolds' parents were in the car, as well, and all were rushed to the hospital after the collision.

"We were unconscious for some period of time, the car was smoldering, and mom was penned in and had to be cut out. There was mass chaos for a long time," Reynolds says.

Reynolds says he and his family are alive because of God's protective angels.

Moving forward, the preacher says he will continue to preach the gospel and save souls, no matter the cost.
