

Apocalyptic Virus? What You Need to Know

In the past few years, we've seen our world plagued by all kinds of sicknesses, from COVID-19 to now a growing number of problems with the bird flu. You may wonder if there's any other new and terrifying diseases on the rampage that you should know about.

The answer?

Absolutely.

As Live Science noted, the "Camp Hill" virus was recently discovered in Alabama. This virus is a "close relative" to both the Nipah and Hendra viruses.

This virus was found in four shrews. While the animals were caught back in 2021, their bodies and organs went under research study, and it was through these results that the Camp Hill virus was identified.

This type of virus, which is a henipavirus, could potentially be dangerous for humans as it "...can cause severe respiratory illness and a type of inflammation of the brain known as encephalitis," according to Live Science.

This discovery comes at a time while Americans already are in an extra cautionary mode as the latest strain of bird flu is now making waves, hitting our food supply. We have seen the price of eggs skyrocket across the nation because of this.

That virus also has been identified in cattle for the first time, recently, in the state of Nevada.

While these new viruses can be terrifying to see, take heart—our God is still on the throne. This is not a time to shrink back but to shine as lights in the darkness, releasing hope, healing and the love of Christ to a weary world.

Be bold, pray with authority and trust that God is working all things together for good—even in this season.
