

Are Americans Turning on Israel? New Study Sparks Urgent End-Times Questions

We may just be living through one of the most prophetic moments described in the Bible.

According to a new Pew Research study, 60% of adults in the United States were found to have “an unfavorable view of Israel,” going up seven points from last year’s 53% disapproval rating.

Along with this disheartening statistic, 59% were discovered to have “little or no confidence in Netanyahu to do the right thing regarding world affairs,” which is also higher than last year’s 52% disapproval rating.

What’s interesting about this is that it doesn’t appear to be a political party issue, considering people on both ends of the aisle were found to disapprove of Israel and Netanyahu.

However, not only are six out of 10 Americans now viewing Israel with a negative slant, but 28% have a “very unfavorable view of Israel,” with “eight-in-10 Democrats and Democratic-leaning independents” seeing Israel in a negative light.

While 58% of Republicans or those who lean to the right see Israel favorably, the quickly changing views are unprecedented.

The Turning of the Nations Against Israel

The Bible repeatedly points to a time in the last days when Israel will stand increasingly isolated on the world stage. In passages such as Zechariah 12:3, God declares that Jerusalem will become “a burdensome stone for all people,” and that “all nations of the earth” will be gathered against it.

What we are witnessing now may be an early echo of that prophetic trajectory. The growing disfavor—even among historically supportive nations like the United States—suggests a cultural and spiritual shift that aligns with biblical warnings of a global turning away from Israel.

This isn't merely about politics or policy; it reflects a broader realignment of hearts, perspectives and allegiances.

As public opinion continues to move, believers are reminded to stay discerning, grounded in Scripture and aware of the times.

If these trends continue, they may not just be headlines – they could be harbingers pointing toward the fulfillment of biblical prophecy.
