

Brett Cooper: The Search for Meaning in a Fast-Paced World

In today's fast-paced world filled with excessive amounts of consumption in all areas of life, one revolution has taken off in an unexpected way: the desire for a slower, quieter life among young conservative women.

For years, women were told that they could do everything a man could, that feminism would save their lives, and ultimately, that there was no purpose in marriage. However, conservative commentator Brett Cooper recently shared with Mikhaila Peterson why she has gone after a quieter pace of life, all the while still keeping her dreams alive.

Breaking News. Spirit-Filled Stories. Subscribe to Charisma on YouTube now!

Despite her early success in the entertainment industry, Cooper expressed a deep dissatisfaction with the superficiality and relentless pace that often characterize modern life. She also explained how marriage has been one of the best things for her growth as a person as well.

"On both sides of the political aisle I was told getting married is like the worst thing you could do for your career," Cooper shares. "But I found somebody who makes me better every day, and I think it's the most important thing. I've never felt more ambitious, I've never felt braver than when I'm with him. It's like he takes all the parts of me that need strengthening and just amplifies them."

Cooper's perspective resonates with a broader movement among young women who are increasingly disillusioned with the pressures of social media and the fast-paced culture it perpetuates. Instead of chasing the latest trends or curating perfect online personas, many are seeking deeper connections, meaningful community, and a life that reflects their core values. Moving onto a farm, for Cooper, has been a breath of fresh air after working such a quick lifestyle.

//

Get your FREE CHARISMA NEWSLETTERS today! Stay up to date with current issues, Holy Spirit news, Christian teachings, Charisma videos & more!

“Comments Section was completely revolving around social media and trends and news. It was so fast-paced and it’s just like chaos,” says Cooper. “It was so freeing to be able to drive home on a literal dirt road and come back to someplace that is so quiet, like so normal, so detached from everything.”

As more young women like Brett Cooper pursue authenticity over superficiality, it signals a hopeful trend towards a culture that values truth, connection and genuine faith. It is possible fulfill both career and personal goals, regardless of what the media has told women in recent decades. Now that Cooper has released her new show, we’ll see how she continues to flourish in all areas of life.

Join Charisma Magazine Online to follow everything the Holy Spirit is doing around the world!

Abby Trivett is content development editor for Charisma Media.