

Carman: I'm Going to Duplicate Myself

Carman isn't backing down from the fight against cancer—even though he recently landed in the emergency room with extreme nausea.

Carman is working on a new album and has committed to equipping more evangelists through his online teaching programs. He wants to breed soul-winners for Jesus—and he wants to win many more before he goes home.

"I've rededicated myself to creating more evangelists. I'm putting out a lesson every week to teach a generation to do what I did," says Carman. "I'm going to duplicate myself as many times over as I possibly can. Devil, you want to take out one, I'm going to put 100 onto you! You're messing with the wrong guy!"

Carman is also determined to make sure as many people in his path get saved as possible. He's making salvation invitations at every turn. When he reads comments from his Facebook fans about how their kids got saved through his ministry, it sparks a fire in his spirit to take it to the next level.

"I have a responsibility to show people what to do when you are attacked. You fire back three times what was fired at you," Carman says. "That's the mentality. Sometimes I get tired. I'm out of breath just talking to you, which is unusual for me. But I have to fight. It's the only thing I can do."
