

Christian Group's Reservations Revoked Over Conservative Values

Read time: 2 minutes 51 seconds

When critics claim that Christians in America today do not suffer persecution or oppression, they are actively denying the reality of living in modern-day America.

This is not a new occurrence, either. The aggressive left has been attacking one Christian baker since 2012. That is over a decade of legal and court battles all because Jack Phillips stands firm in his Christian faith.

But the left has shown one thing, that in the name of tolerance they are in fact spreading intolerance.

The disease known as “woke cancel culture” reared its ugly head yet again, this time in Virginia when a Christian group had their restaurant reservations revoked mere hours before their event.

Their crime? Being pro-life, believing in the design God created for marriage between one man and one woman.

The Family Foundation was told on the day of their reservation that the restaurant, Metzger Bar and Butchery, would not be honored.

The restaurant, co-owned by celebrity chef Brittanny Anderson who is known for her shows “Top Chef” and “Chopped,” released a statement saying they did not want their employees to feel “uncomfortable” or “unsafe.”
