

Christian Pop Artist Reports 'Total Miracle' in California Wildfires

The California wildfires are dying down, but not before destroying homes in its path. As many as 125,000 people living in and around San Diego, California's second-largest city, were forced to flee their homes last week, according to Reuters.

But Christian singer Rebecca St. James is reporting a "total miracle" amid the ashes.

"A tree in our front yard was burnt and a water pipe burst, but our house is ok!" St. James, whose latest album is called I Will Praise You, posted on Facebook. "Sounds like the fire came right to our back fence. It's a total miracle cause the wind changed right when the fires were about to take over our house.

"You can see the proof when you look at where the fire stopped, 3 feet from our back fence. The fire was a 2-3 story wall of flame, only meters away from our home! Apparently a few of our neighbors stayed to help fight the fire, which is a big reason why most of the houses on our street were saved. Unfortunately our neighbors three doors away lost their house, so please keep praying for that family. Thanks to you all for your prayers. They are greatly appreciated!"
