Court Upholds Double Firing of Christian Official Who Expressed Biblical Views on Marriage

During an adoption case in which two men sought legal approval as co-parents, Christian magistrate Richard Page shared his views with colleagues behind closed doors.

And those views reflect common Judeo-Christian beliefs: Children do best when raised by both a mother and a father.

That unleashed a firestorm in which Page was reported to judicial watchdogs, accused of "serious misconduct" and ultimately suspended from his position and removed from his role at an NHS trust after he explained on national television that he had been discriminated against for his faith-based values. Following a six-year legal battle, the Court of Appeal has ruled that the double firing was lawful, per Premier Christian News.

"This is some crazy Christian stuff," a partygoer exclaimed as one by one, the elementary-age children were filled with the Holy Spirit's power and began speaking in tongues and praying over each other.

The House sent the budget bill to the Senate early Saturday morning. The budget is one of those bills in the Senate that only needs a majority vote. Knowing there are not the 60 votes required under the filibuster rule, Democrats hope to attach the Equality Act to the budget, thus bypassing the 60-vote requirement. {eo}
