Franklin Graham Praises the World's Richest Man for Pro-Free Speech Stance

This week, Elon Musk reached an agreement to buy Twitter for $44 billion. The blockbuster announcement was made Monday, capping off a tense battle between the world's richest man and Twitter's board of directors. If Musk keeps his promise to stand for free speech, this could be a major win for Christians.

The battle for control of Twitter was not only for the company but also for free speech itself, since Twitter is widely considered "a global town square." This defining acquisition comes just days after Rev. Franklin Graham, CEO and president of Samaritan's Purse and CEO and president of the Billy Graham Evangelistic Association, said that he welcomes the famous entrepreneur-billionaire and investor, known for Tesla and SpaceX, getting engaged to lead the charge to transform Twitter.

"I'm glad to see someone who cares so much about free speech get involved with this platform," said Rev. Graham in a public statement. "Twitter is still one of the most influential platforms in the world, and I'm grateful to be on it to share my faith and values, but it has become a place where people are banned or blocked if they make statements that Twitter doesn't find acceptable. This concerns me as a Christian."
