Mike Lindell Announces New Social Media Platform: 'Frank'

After his social media accounts were shut down for "violating policies," conservative MyPillow founder and CEO Mike Lindell has released exclusive information about his new platform: "Frank."

"I am getting ready to launch Frank, and it is going to be a place where we can talk freely, put out our influence and give people hope," Lindell says. One aspect of the platform will be dedicated to investigation regarding the 2020 election. "We have hired the best investigators and resources and are working hard to backtrack the various aspects of the election," Lindell says.

In a time of nationwide discouragement, Lindell is confident that America is returning to its biblical roots, and he believes once past certain challenges going to the Supreme Court, "we will demonstrate massive international involvement in the recent election." This fact, Lindell says, regardless of party affiliation, should be at the forefront of Americans' minds.

Social Media Abuzz Over Colorado Shooter Assumed 'White Supremacist,' Actually Syrian Muslim

In the wake of the tragic March 22 Boulder, Colorado, mass shooting, social media users took to their platforms, calling for the arrest of the shooter—whom many dubbed a white male.

As more information has been released, the shooter has been identified as 21-year-old Syrian Muslim immigrant Ahmad Al Aliwi Alissa.

A prominent voice on social media, Caleb Hull, posted a thread of the tweets assuming the shooter's race.

Rep. Jerry Nadler Says 'God's Will Is No Concern of This Congress'

Jerry Nadler (D-N.Y.), chairman of the House Judiciary Committee, sternly rebuked Greg Steube (R-Fla.) for daring to refer to the Bible during a congressional debate.

Nadler's attitude is typical of a cultural shift in America wherein the Bible, once revered, is now dismissed and demeaned. It's a sharp departure from America's founding generation where the Bible was read and revered by all classes whether rich or poor, slave or free, aristocrat or peasant.
