

Satanist, God Hater and Meth Addict's Conversion Story Goes Viral

A few months ago, Carl Sartor would have described himself as someone who hated God, but today the 35-year-old says he wants everyone to experience God's love.

Carl's story of salvation is going viral on social media.

Carl gave his life to Christ at Cross Church in Parkersburg, West Virginia, in November.

The former meth addict told CBN News he had been running from God since age 5.

"I've always had this emptiness in my life," he said. "No matter what religion I followed, I always believed that when you died, you were dead. That was it. You were in the ground."

Carl shared he was an atheist for 15 years and a Satanist for five years.

"I would argue you tooth and nail that He did not exist. I was living in a vicious cycle of drugs and alcohol. I had a severe anger problem. I blamed everyone and everything," he wrote in a Facebook post. "I also blamed God."

Carl said it wasn't until he hit rock bottom in 2021 that he began to have an open mind about Jesus.

"I couldn't stand who I was and what was going on in my life," he explained. "I tried to commit suicide."

Carl decided then to try Cross Church where Minister Rich Walters had invited him more than a year ago.

“He said, ‘I’d love to have you for service.’ I said, ‘I walk a different path, buddy. You’d never catch me there. It will be a cold day in hell before you see me in church.’”

But it was that invitation, a word of knowledge about Carl’s life and a message on forgiveness that led Carl to let go of hate and give his life to Christ. {eo}
