

Conservative Newscaster Harris Faulkner: 'We are in a Spiritual Fight' for America

In an age of spiritual darkness and drought, God is raising up the bold who are willing to speak out against the evil of the day.

Now, the Lord is calling up modern-day Deborah's, Gideon's, Rahab's and David's to stand up against those who seek to dismantle His design for humanity.

It is believed by many, but remains unconfirmed, that Tucker Carlson was fired from his position at Fox News because of his comments on spiritual matters, evil and the war in Ukraine.

In the wake of Carlson's departure, another Fox News host has stood up and stated the truth which major media outlets refuse to tell: that America is in the midst of a spiritual war that will shape the future of the nation.

During her opening monologue on Monday's edition of "Fox News Tonight," host Harris Faulkner gave a fiery and impassioned message to her viewers bemoaning the state of the nation under its weak leadership that has turned America away from God's grace:

"We are the greatest nation on Earth. Right now, we need to remind some folk that we belong in our divinely given place at the top. We didn't just stumble here," says Faulkner. "We are a nation under God. We have shed our might, and our grace. And we have been anointed at times in our young nation's history to fight for, clothe, feed and pray with more people than anyone else on the planet."

Recent years have seen America stop being that beacon of Christian principle however, mired in corrupt schemes, promoting radical ideologies that run opposed to God's will and design and the removal of anything Christian from the public square.

"We just need a jolt to revive the greatness we are destined for. We are still American patriots and our faith still moves mountains," Faulkner reminds her viewers.

"We've been dabbling in some dangerous things of late. Squashing free speech through cancel culture, losing our sovereignty by overrun borders and tolerating a White House dedicated to redefining us and dirtying up the concept of patriotism," Faulkner adds.

Faulkner shed light on the very subject that Rabbi Jonathan Cahn warned President Biden of months ago, that he is playing with powers he does not understand or is even aware of.

By redefining marriage and lighting the White House up in the colors of the Pride movement, the president has turned this country over to the pagan deities and principalities that controlled the ancient world.

Demonic influence is evident from the highest echelons of American government to local school boards injecting radical gender ideologies into the curricula of America's youth.

As apostasy takes hold in America, the warnings from the Bible of what the world would be like are becoming more of a reality each day.

"There is a realignment of our system of law and order that is hardening already violent criminals, and putting enormous power in the hands of the most radical liberals we've seen to date," says Faulkner.

"It seems the proverbial hour is midnight. Even a sliver of light is hard to see, but take heart. [Do] you know what happens at midnight? The new day begins. Just when it [may seem] we are bending to the will of things that don't make any sense, at one of our nation's darkest hours, that's exactly when our new beginning can be forged," Faulkner explains.

These trials that America is enduring are also tests meant to purify and harden the resolve of those committed to the godly principles of freedom, morality and faith.

Those who endure will be blessed according to the book of James, and as history has taught, even in the darkest hours of societies past, God has used those times for nation-changing revivals and awakenings to erupt in the hearts of the people and foiling the destructive plans of the enemy. {eoa}
