This all points to a deeper, darker question that is simmering right on top of this conversation: What spiritual forces are at play in this scenario? What hidden agendas of the programs and their programmers are now coming to light?

Tools like Grok are shaped by the worldviews of their creators and can become vessels for agendas far beyond data and algorithms. When chatbots begin echoing hate speech or responding to tragedy with mockery, it's not merely a programming error—it's a reflection of the deeper spiritual darkness at work in the culture that built them. Scripture warns us that in the last days, deception will increase, and we must remain discerning.
