

Democratic Candidate: Republicans Have ‘Lost All Claim to Ever Using Religious Language Again’

In a second heated Democratic debate Thursday night, candidate Pete Buttigieg issued a scathing rebuke of the Christian faith espoused by so many in the Republican party.

“The Republican party likes to cloak itself in the language of religion,” Buttigieg fumed.

Noting that the Democrats are quieter on religion due to a “commitment to the separation of Church and State,” Buttigieg warned that “we should call out hypocrisy when we see it,” referencing the current border crisis.

Click here to read the rest of this story from our content partners at Faithwire.