Kari Lake, a pro-life conservative who is running to be the next governor of Arizona, shared a shocking revelation in a Newsmax interview recently that an “unhinged” group of pro-death abortion radicals assaulted her gubernatorial campaign’s interns for voicing their support for life.

The Newsmax host, Benny Johnson, who was conducting the interview of the Arizona gubernatorial candidate, characterized the radical left-wing attack as an expression of “demonic energy.”

Lake says, “Those were some of our volunteers who are pro-life. They were there to voice their opinion on the subject [of abortion]. They are staunchly pro-life. I’m so proud of them. They were spit on while they were there. One of our young volunteers was verbally assaulted for a half an hour, with just the worst things told to them. Someone told her that they wished that she had been aborted. It was just awful. This is what we’re up against.”

The Newsmax host asked her, “Why are these radical left-wing woke progressives always so angry?”

He noted that people at MAGA events are generally “happy,” but if a person wanders into a leftist event you are “likely to get physically injured if they find out that you disagree with them.”

“It is almost demonic,” says Lake. “It feels very evil. I hope they wake up to the lies they have been fed about abortion. It is not health care. It is the killing, it is the sacrifice, it is the execution of a baby in a mother’s womb, and it’s incredibly sad.”

Looking ahead, she adds, “When I am governor, we plan to help scared, frightened women who find themselves pregnant, and we want to get them help. We want to encourage them to choose life, like their mother chose life.”

After the TV interview, Lake went onto her Twitter account and tweeted, “My message to the Lost Souls that literally spit in the face of my amazing interns: Never forget that your mother chose LIFE. We’re praying for you.”

If Kari Lake is elected governor of Arizona as a pro-life woman of faith, she will enter office as a political leader who actually expressed love for her enemies, setting an example for other political leaders to emulate. President Donald Trump has endorsed her as a candidate in the state of Arizona. {eoa}
