

Why Leftist Censorship 'Threatens America's Future More Than Any External Threat'

Dennis Prager, cofounder of PragerU, delivered oral testimony Tuesday before the U.S. Senate Judiciary Subcommittee on the Constitution during a hearing on "Google and Censorship through Search Engines."

The hearing and Prager's testimony comes as Big Tech companies such as Google, its subsidiary YouTube, and Facebook and Twitter face increased scrutiny amid accusations of anti-conservative bias.

PragerU has two active lawsuits against Google/YouTube, one in federal court and another in California state court. Oral arguments have been scheduled by the Ninth U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals for Tuesday, Aug. 27.

Dennis Prager's remarks before the subcommittee hearing can be watched here and are included below in full:

It is an honor to be invited to speak in the United States Senate. But I wish I were not so honored. Because the subject of this hearing—Google and YouTube's (and for that matter Twitter and Facebook's) suppression of internet content on ideological grounds—threatens the future of America more than any external enemy.

In fact, never in American history has there been as strong a threat to freedom of speech as there is today.

Before addressing this, however, I think it important that you know a bit about me and the organization I co-founded,

Prager University, PragerU as it's often referred to.

I was born in Brooklyn, N.Y. My late father, Max Prager, was a CPA and an Orthodox Jew who volunteered to serve in the U.S. Navy at the start of World War II. My father's senior class thesis at the City College of New York was on anti-Semitism in America. Yet, despite his keen awareness of the subject, he believed that Jews living in America were the luckiest Jews to have ever lived outside of Israel.

He was right. Having taught Jewish history at Brooklyn College, written a book on anti-Semitism, and fought Jew-hatred my whole life, I thank God for living in America.

It breaks my heart that a vast number of young Americans have not only not been taught how lucky they are to be Americans but have been taught either how unlucky they are or how ashamed they should be.

It breaks my heart for them because contempt for one's country leaves a terrible hole in one's soul and because ungrateful people always become unhappy and angry people.

And it breaks my heart for America, because no good country can survive when its people have contempt for it.

I have been communicating this appreciation of America for 35 years as a radio talk show host, the last 20 in national syndication with the Salem Radio Network, an organization that is a blessing in American life. One reason I started PragerU was to communicate America's moral purpose and moral achievements both to young Americans and to young people around the world. With a billion views a year, and with more than half of the viewers under age of 35, PragerU has achieved some success.

My philosophy of life is easily summarized: God wants us to be good. Period. God without goodness is fanaticism and goodness without God will not long endure. Everything I and PragerU do emanates from belief in the importance of being a good person. That some label us extreme or “haters” only reflects on the character and the broken moral compass of those making such accusations. They are the haters and extremists.

PragerU releases a five-minute video every week. Our presenters include three former prime ministers, four Pulitzer Prize winners, liberals, conservatives, gays, blacks, Latinos, atheists, believers, Jews, Christians, Muslims and professors and scientists from MIT, Harvard, Stanford and a dozen other universities.

Do you think the secretary-general of NATO, or the former prime ministers of Norway, Canada, and Spain, or the late Charles Krauthammer or Philip Hamburger, distinguished professor of law at Columbia Law School, would make a video for an extreme or hate-filled site? The idea is not only preposterous; it is a smear.

Yet, Google, which owns YouTube, has restricted access to 56 of our 320 five-minute videos and to other videos we produce. “Restricted” means that families that have a filter to avoid pornography and violence cannot see that video. It also means that no school or library can show that video.

Google has even restricted access to a video on the Ten Commandments. Yes, the Ten Commandments.

We have repeatedly asked Google why our videos are restricted. No explanation is ever given.

But, of course, we know why. Because they come from a conservative perspective.

Liberals and conservatives differ on many issues. But they have always agreed that free speech must be preserved. While the left has never supported free speech, liberals always have. I therefore appeal to liberals to join us in fighting on behalf of America's crowning glory—free speech. Otherwise, I promise you, one day you will say, "First they came after conservatives, and I said nothing, and then they came after me. And there was no one left to speak up for me."

Thank you.
