

Disney's Startling Move—Are They Turning to Christianity?!

Sometimes dreams really do come true.

For the last several years, Disney has been the champion of wokeism, DEI and all things LGBTQ+. However, with plummeting box office sales and recent backlash from the public, their latest move just may be their most shocking one yet.

According to Newsweek, after deciding to cancel the transgender storyline in their new Pixar show, "Win or Lose," Disney has now added a Christian character to the film.

Interesting choice.

After years of trying to shove anything wicked, disgusting and filthy into the minds of children, perhaps they recognize now that it was never a good idea to try to create kids content filled with the occult, abortion and sexual orientation propaganda.

As "Not the Bee" shared, "Laurie," the Christian character, is seen praying before one of the team's softball games.

"Dear heavenly Father, please give me strength. I have faith, but sometimes the doubt creeps in. I promise I'll be good," the prayer goes. "I promise I'll be good, and I, uh, won't do that thing again. I'm not sure where You stand on it, but I won't do it. I just want to catch a ball. Or get a hit. For my team, of course."

Not a bad start for Disney. It's also reported that the character's room later shows images that clearly depict her faith.

So, is Disney really changing? Could we see breakthrough in one of the largest corporations in America? Time will tell. For now, let's pray for the truth of the gospel to penetrate the hearts of those who produce the films and their global audience.
