

Does This 'Terminal Velocity' Point to a Coming Global Financial Panic?

Economists remain apprehensive of President Donald Trump's recent plan to revive the financial state of our country. Top trends researcher Gerald Celente says, "The global situation has created an environment for financial panic." But theologian and author Dave Williams says not to panic. In his book Hope in the Last Days (May 2, 2017) Williams writes about how impending disasters such as global financial collapse may indicate the coming of the end times. At the same time, he says recognizing these signs is the first step to preparing. Williams pinpoints the preview signs to the impending disaster, which include:

- Iran's increasing nuclear capabilities and its stated agenda to destroy Western civilization and Israel
- Deceptive leaders teaching false ideas to masses of people
- Famines, epidemics and earthquakes causing death or lifelong health issues for victims in various places around the world
- America's national debt squeezing the life out of our nation
- Police shootings, race riots and violence in schools, workplaces and the home

By understanding the precise signs, markers and categorical conditions that preclude the last days, we gain insight of how to spiritually and practically get ready for the end. Williams says, "When we see the multiple signs Jesus spoke of concerning the last days, we know the hour is approaching. Once the hour strikes, there is no turning back. It will occur suddenly with no more time to prepare ..."

He warns, "Beware—the small deceptions of today will become the grand delusions of tomorrow!"

"The apocalyptic storm clouds foretold by the ancient biblical prophets are now arriving," said Jack Van Impe, host of the television program Jack Van Impe Presents, airing in 247 countries around the world. "The hearts of people everywhere hunger to know the future. Hope in the Last Days will walk you through the end-time prophecies, helping you prepare for what is about to transpire on the earth."
