

Donald Trump, Dave Ramsey on What's at Stake for America

In a brand-new interview, Dave Ramsey and Donald Trump discussed what's at stake for America, and the policies Trump says he will implement to make the nation strong again.

After reaching out to both the Harris and Trump campaigns, Trump and his team agreed to sit down with the financial expert and talk about his plan for America's future. In a day of financial crisis, our entire nation is looking to know what can be done to turn around the turmoil we are seeing.

"This inflation thing's a big deal," Ramsey says. "What's the first thing you're going to do on that?"

"People are getting wiped out like never before," says Trump. "It's because of what they did with energy. Also, then they topped it with spending trillions of dollars that they didn't need that's being just wasted. The first thing you have to do is get the energy down. If you get the energy down, other things are going to follow."

Trump then told Ramsey he believes he can get the cost of energy down by 50% within less than a year if elected back to office, along with his goal of lowering taxes. He then alludes to a future for Elon Musk in his cabinet if re-elected to the presidency.

"He's [Musk] is a pretty great guy. And he gave me a full endorsement and all of that, but he's got a good sense on that. There's tremendous cost-cutting that we can do," says Trump.

The two also delve into what it means to raise a great family of children who will turn out to be fantastic leaders.

"I always told my kids no drugs, no alcohol, no cigarettes," Trump says.

It was watching his brother, Fred, struggle with alcoholism that taught Trump the potential dangers surrounding it.

"He'd been through it and he'd say, 'No alcohol; I never want to see you drink...' he'd also say 'no cigarettes,'" Trump recalls.

Ramsey also asked about what may be the biggest elephant in the room of all: Trump's decision to go back to Butler, Pennsylvania to conclude the speech he started in July when the first assassination attempt on his life occurred.

Remembering how tough that day was for him and his family, Trump says it may just have been more than mere luck that prevented him from dying that night.

"I got very lucky or maybe, maybe more than luck," Trump says looking up in the air. "If I [didn't] turn my head at the exact 90 degree angle, if I was a little off one way or the [wouldn't be] doing this very nice interview with you."

As election day nears upon us, we must remember that our votes are the way we've been given to show which direction we'd like our nation to go in. Instead of standing on the sidelines, Christians must use this opportunity to vote for the policies that truly align best with the Word of God.
