

Double Blow: Charles' and Kate's Cancer Revelations Shock the World

The royal family is dealing with the plague of cancer from two of its most esteemed members.

As Princess Kate announced on Friday that she has been undergoing chemotherapy for cancer, King Charles III is also feeling the pressure of his cancer diagnosis.

As NBC News reported, Peter Phillips, the oldest grandchild of Queen Elizabeth, said that Charles was "in good spirits." However, that doesn't mean that Charles is completely satisfied with how things are going.

"I think, ultimately, he's hugely frustrated," Phillips said to Sky News Australia. "He's frustrated that he can't get on and do everything that he wants to be able to do."

Charles' diagnosis became public at the beginning of last month. Shortly afterward prophetic words previously spoken by influential ministers including Joseph Z, Mike Signorelli and Charlie Shamp began to resurface as they previously predicted that a shifting of power would sweep through the royal family.

Joseph Z prophesied that Charles' reign would act as a period of transition before William would ascend the throne.

"His time will come, and it will be very, very important when it does, and we've got to pray for that because there's a change of the guard of a generation that is right upon us right now," Z said.

Mike Signorelli also predicted that a dire illness would affect someone in elite power. "I'm going to step out and take a huge risk, I believe one of them may even get a diagnosis of a terminal illness."

While concerns about Charles have taken the internet by storm, Kate's announcement of cancer also comes at a time when rumors have floated about where she might be. From theories that photos of her had been generated by AI to beliefs that Kate and William were having marriage struggles, Kate's announcement made it clear she has been behind-the-scenes battling with cancer.

This would be the perfect time for believers to pray for the royal family as they deal with these diagnoses. {eo}
