

Faith-Tech Merger for 'Glorify' Offers World's First Christian Smart Ring

Two faith-oriented tech companies, Glorify and Confidein, are joining forces to launch the world's first Christian smart ring.

The Glorify daily devotional app already has over 25 million users, and it's merging with Confidein, an AI hardware and faith technology company, to create a significant new full-stack company in the faith tech sector.

The new company will be called Glorify, and its mission is to connect the digital and physical worlds to give Christians new tools to live out their faith each day.

The initial launch from the company, which plans to offer faith-based software and wearables over the long term, is a smart device called the Glorify Ring.

The goal is to help Christians maintain a consistent spiritual life in a world full of digital distractions. The company says its Glorify Ring will do that by prompting moments of prayer and spiritual reflection, helping people to refocus their faith in God.
