

Former GOP Star Sarah Palin Reportedly Facing Divorce After 31 Years of Marriage

Sarah Palin's husband, Todd, has reportedly filed for divorce. Paperwork filed on Sept. 6 is believed to be from Todd, ending his marriage to Sarah Palin, the former governor of Alaska and 2008 Republican nominee for vice president.

Neither Todd nor Sarah's names appear on the paperwork, but the initials "TMP" and "SLP" were located, along with marriage dates and other initials that match their family history, according to ABC News.

The divorce filing requests that the couple's property be "divided equitably and fairly."

It states the reason for the divorce, saying, "There is an incompatibility of temperament between the parties such that they find it impossible to continue to live together as man and wife."

Also, it appears that Todd has requested joint legal and physical custody of their youngest child, 11-year-old Trig.

The Palin family rose to fame after former Republican presidential candidate Sen. John McCain made Sarah his running mate during the 2008 election.
