

Former Homosexual Says Silencing Christians Is LGBTQ Agenda's Main Objective

Gender-neutral bathrooms, biologically male transgenders competing against female athletes, "Drag Queen Story Hour" at public libraries, Marvel movie same-sex kisses, HGTV's House Hunter 'throuple,' Sesame Street's cross-dressing 'gay icon', LEGO Masters' cross-dresser and same-sex couples, and Congresswoman Alexandria Ocasio-Cortez's pledge of allegiance to the 'drag.' When will the blatant LGBTQ agenda on American television, movies and society end?

George Carneal, author of the new book Queer to Christ: My Journey Into the Light spent 25 years embracing the homosexual lifestyle. Appearing on this week's episode of the CBN News Channel program The Global Lane, he predicts LGBTQ pressures on American culture will get worse.

"I knew when they opened the floodgates it's never going to be enough really until we look at the bigger picture of what the agenda is really," Carneal explained. "And that is silencing Christians and all opposition to this agenda and anything that is pro-family, pro-Christian, pro-life, pro-America."

Carneal believes the LGBTQ agenda is going to continue until "they can silence everyone."

He warns Christians against accepting Hollywood's glamorization of the homosexual lifestyle because it gives the public a sanitized version of the true nature of homosexuality.

"Until you sit down and listen to the testimonies of every gay, lesbian and transgender individual who has come out of that life and you listen to the horror stories of what we've been through and the reality of that life ... the life is so different from what Hollywood and from what the media portray," Carneal insisted.

So, how should Christians respond to LGBTQ influences on modern-day American society and culture?
