

Franklin Graham Issues Serious Rebuke After Super Tuesday

The merry-go-round of political back-and-forth keeps spinning, but evangelist Franklin Graham won't have it any longer.

"I'm calling for a truce! A time out. A halt to the insults, the back-stabbing, the dirty tricks, and the name-calling that has been spewing from most of the presidential candidates," Graham posted while the Super Tuesday numbers ticked across newsrooms.

"#SuperTuesday is now over, but the campaign for the highest office in our land has stooped to a new low—and it's not something to be proud of. Seriously. I call on the candidates to drop the childish bickering and get back to the issues that can change America for the good, for the sake of our children and grandchildren. Otherwise America is ultimately the loser. It's obvious that this country is in trouble—spiritually, morally, and politically."

Graham, himself, has been traveling across the country for his Decision America Tour in an attempt to unite the states for God.
