

Glenn Beck Predicts Chaos for Kamala Harris at DNC

How crazy are the days we are living in according to conservative commentator Glenn Beck?

“If I was to sum it up in just a few words, I would say it would have to be ‘Jesus is coming,’” Beck explains to host Allie Beth Stuckey.

These are certainly wild times, especially when it comes to American politics. While many believe that Vice President Kamala Harris now holds the Democratic nomination for president, Beck isn’t convinced.

Beck expressed skepticism about Harris’ potential nomination for the presidency, stating, “I can’t imagine it’s going to be Kamala Harris.” He highlighted a perceived lack of endorsement from influential Democratic leaders, particularly former President Barack Obama.

“Barack Obama hasn’t weighed in on it yet... he doesn’t want Kamala Harris,” Beck said, suggesting that Harris lacks backing from key party figures.

This is not the only area of uncertainty facing the party in the coming days as, Beck warns of potential chaos at the Democratic National Convention, drawing comparisons to the 1968 convention in Chicago, marked by mass riots among the various strands of the political left, and broadcast nightly over network news coverage into American living rooms.

“I imagine we’re going to have chaos on the convention floor,” Beck predicted.

That would be a stark contrast to the Republican National Convention which recently wrapped up in Milwaukee, Wisconsin, on a united front, firmly behind the leadership of former President Donald Trump.

Beyond Harris' individual prospects, Beck criticized the broader approach of the Democratic Party, particularly their handling of the primaries and the nomination process. "The Democrats seem to be OK with it, which is so bizarre," he commented, referring to what he perceives as the party's willingness to suppress internal challenges to President Biden's leadership.

Beck correctly notes the chaos and absurdity of our times, but we must remember that Jesus is the victor over darkness. As believers, we wage a spiritual battle from a position of victory, not defeat, and are commanded to share this victory with others, as outlined in the Great Commission. Through Jesus, we find the strength, discernment and love needed to overcome the enemy on the spiritual battlefield.
