

Has The Time Come For This Kim Clement Prophecy to Pass?

Vibrant South Africa is known as the “Rainbow nation,” but residents say that since Nelson Mandela stepped away from office, corruption has taken hold.

Musical prophet Kim Clement, a native South African, gave a word about this very time.

“South Africa, you, once corrupted, once evil but yet a remnant of people who love Me, have I forgotten you?” Clement says of the Lord. “Have I forgotten you, South Africa? Has the flame gone out? No! The flame is in the hearts of the people of all races, and yet there is corruption from the top, but I will wipe out the corrupt one and the corrupt ones who are allowing the evil and iniquity and the greed.”

Just last year, hundreds of Christians gathered in South Africa’s parliament to pray.

With a major election coming up next year, could it be time for Clement’s full word to come to pass?

In a new video, Clement’s daughter, Donne Clement Petruska, and family friend Dana McClure discuss exactly what’s happening in the nation. Take a look!
