

Hero Truck Driver Risks Life to Save Woman Trapped in Blazing Fire

Wednesday was a typical day for truck driver Randall D'Addezio—until it wasn't.

D'Addezio was reportedly behind the wheel in Grand Chute, Wisconsin, when he witnessed a dangerous crash involving two semi-trucks.

"I put on my four ways because I honestly thought the truck was going to come over and slam into me, came to a stop, looked, seen that she was still in the driver's seat, seeing the fire and stuff, the sparks, the tires were on fire," he told WBAY-TV.

As flames began to spread quickly, he realized a female driver was trapped and unable to exit.

D'Addezio knew there wasn't time to wait for emergency personnel, so he put himself in harm's way, grabbed a fire extinguisher, and pulled the woman out of the perilous situation before her truck was totally engulfed in flames.

"My body just started moving on its own," D'Addezio said. "I told her it was going to be OK—'I'm here.' I smiled and said I'd help [her] out."

In the end, D'Addezio did just that, rescuing the grateful woman from what could have been a deadly situation. His boldness and willingness to serve is notable.
