

How Presidential: Obama Laughs at Gay Sex Joke, 'Fist-Bumps' Drag Queen

President Obama is doing more than supporting gay rights—he's fist bumping with cross-dressing men who have gay sex.

As the story goes, Obama last week visited Franklin Barbeque in Austin, Texas. When he approached the cashier to pay the bill, Daniel Rugg Webb was ringing the register.

Webb, who moonlights as a musician and comedian and occasionally dresses like a drag queen, bemoans he wasn't wearing his sequin gown for the special occasion.

According to the Austin Chronicle, Webb slammed hands on the counter in dramatic fashion as the president came close and declare, "Equal rights for gay people!"

The president then asked him a pointed question: "Are you gay?"

"Only when I have sex," Webb replied.

Webb says Obama laughed and said, "Bump me."

"If Rick Perry would've walked in, I would have lost my job. I would've taken that old queen to town," Webb told the Chronicle.

This is just one more sign of the times. Can you imagine Abraham Lincoln doing this?

I'm not one to bash the president. I believe we need to pray for Obama and Webb, but this is troubling. Amid all the darkness, though, there are bright shining lights. I'm grateful to see testimonies from people like Janet Boynes that are helping many homosexuals escape a lifestyle in which they feel trapped.
