

How Trump Put an END to This Ridiculous Holiday

The Trump administration truly is standing up for righteousness and faith to come back to America again.

Last year, the Biden administration did perhaps the most ghastly thing they could: declared Easter 2024 as a holiday marked for 'Transgender Day of Visibility.' At the time, the former White House administration even put out a statement that it was a day to "honor the extraordinary courage and contributions of transgender Americans."

Now under the Trump administration, the president has moved in an entirely different direction than Biden, declaring that "There are only two genders, male and female." Trump also signed a ban on transgender athletes in women's sports, bringing back safety and fairness to females who have had to unjustly compete against biological men.

The difference between these two administrations couldn't be more stark. One openly embraced the demise of gender and the unique contributions that men and women each give to society, while the other is defending the image in which God created us. While the mainstream media will still set out to make this defense of male and female as a negative thing, we have been given a chance to get back to the biblical and biological basics of what we each were made to be.

The Biden administration embraced moral confusion, disregarding the divine image in which humanity was created. In contrast, the Trump administration is upholding biblical principles, safeguarding the distinctions between men and women as ordained by God. This shift offers hope to Christians who have been praying for a return to righteousness in the nation—a glimmer of light in the battle for America's soul.

As Christians, let's not only celebrate the restoration of godly values in America, but let's continue to pray for those who are genuinely struggling with gender confusion. Many are deeply deceived by the lies of the culture, battling identity crises and inner turmoil. Pray that they would receive the healing and deliverance only Christ can bring to their lives.
