

Israeli Ambassador Blasts UN for Failing to Denounce Hamas Terrorism

Israel's Ambassador to the United Nations, Danny Danon, has criticized the UN for its lack of resolutions condemning Hamas, the Palestinian militant organization governing the Gaza Strip. Despite numerous attacks attributed to Hamas, the UN has not passed any formal resolutions denouncing the group.

Ambassador Danon urged the international body to take a definitive stance against Hamas's actions, highlighting the absence of official condemnation as a significant oversight.

Danon stated: "The U.N. has held countless emergency meetings on Israel, it has passed endless resolutions, but when terrorists massacred a baby and a child and then mutilated them, the U.N. has no resolutions to offer."

"We demand justice for all of them to come back, and the U.N. should pass a resolution condemning Hamas. Since October 7 it never happened," Danon went on to add.

The lack of UN resolutions against Hamas is notable, especially considering the group's designation as a terrorist organization by several countries, including the United States and Israel.

Fox News reached out for comment to which the U.N. secretary-general's spokesperson, Stéphane Dujarric, responded, stating: "Even in the absence of such resolution on Hamas, the Secretary-General has clearly and explicitly condemned Hamas terror actions more than 100 times in public speeches or statements since October 7th.

We have been very clear, including last week in my briefings, that we condemn the parading of bodies and displaying of the coffins of the deceased hostages, including the Bibas family, in the manner it was done by Hamas, which is both abhorrent and appalling."

Many conservatives argue that this failure reflects a broader bias against Israel within international institutions, reinforcing the need for strong U.S. support for its closest Middle Eastern ally.
