

It's Time to Dump Netflix Right Now

Streaming giant Netflix has threatened to scale back its investment in the state of Georgia if a new pro-life law goes into effect next year.

The subscription service said it would “work with the ACLU” and other pro-abortion entities to fight the “fetal heartbeat bill” in court if it manages to become a fully-enforced law across the state. The bill was signed into law by Governor Brian Kemp on May 7, but will not be enforceable until Jan 1st, 2020.

We have many women working on productions in Georgia, whose rights, along with millions of others, will be severely restricted by this law,” Netflix’s chief content officer, Ted Sarandos, told Variety.

Click here to read the rest of this story from our content partners at Faithwire.