

James Robison's Daughter Loses Cancer Battle

James Robison's daughter has lost a long battle with cancer. Robin, who was 40 years old with three children, passed away on Friday.

Robison wrote about his loss on his personal blog in a post entitled, "A Tribute to Robin." Here is the text of that post:

"Our precious daughter Robin, who lived for Jesus with all of her heart, went to live with Him this past Friday. She revealed clearly to everyone what Jesus meant by 'abundant life.' She lived in His peace and passed from this world in His prevailing peace that passes understanding. Amazing Grace how sweet it is.

"Betty and I, along with Robin's love-filled husband Kenny, their three children, and all of our family thank you for your concern and prayers. What a daughter, wife, mother, sister, and faithful witness she was during her 40-year journey on this earth. She was truly a bright light in a dark world.

"Mom and I sure love you, miss you, and will see you someday when you shout, 'Mom and Dad come see The King of Kings in person, isn't He awesome!' Indeed He is and we saw Him in you every time we were together. We want everyone to someday join us forever in His presence."