

Jonah and the Whale? Kayaker's Terrifying Encounter

Did someone just experience a real-life Jonah and the whale kind of encounter?

Off of the coast of Chile, 24-year-old Adrián Simancas was kayaking with his father close to the San Isidro lighthouse when he was briefly swallowed by a massive humpback whale, according to The Guardian.

Simancas' father, Dell Simancas, caught the entire moment on camera, which shows the whale swallowing Adrián and spitting him out soon after.

"I thought I was dead," Simancas said. "I thought that it had eaten me, that it had swallowed me. But when I came out, I understood that it was probably out of curiosity, that the whale had approached me or maybe to communicate something."

Dell Simancas also talked about the moment that he saw his son get swallowed by the giant creature.

"I couldn't see him, I couldn't see the boat," Simancas said.

On the video recording, Dell Simancas can be heard yelling to his son to stay calm after the whale let go of him.

This story directly reflects one of the Bible's most famous narratives of Jonah being swallowed by a giant fish. Jonah's time in the belly of the fish was not just a miraculous survival story, but a moment of divine correction and purpose.

Could this encounter serve as a reminder that God still moves through the wonders of His creation today?

As believers, we are reminded that even when the storms of life—or the creatures of the deep—seem to overwhelm us, God is always in control. Whether in the belly of a great fish or in the hands of an unseen Savior, His mercy endures forever.
