

Kevin Sorbo Shares Powerful Message of Faith Beyond Politics

Christian actor Kevin Sorbo isn't shy about his political views and, on the heels of the re-election of now-President-elect Donald Trump, the "God's Not Dead" star had a message for Christians in America.

During a conversation with CBN News, Sorbo, before jet-setting off to Trump's Mar-a-Lago estate in West Palm Beach, Florida, made it clear he supported the president-elect in the race for the White House, but urged Christians to prioritize unification, regardless of the election results.

"Once we have who we have ... people have to go, 'OK, what do we need to do now to try to bring the country together in some way,' because that's the more important thing out there, more than anything, no matter who's president," said Sorbo, going on to assert politicians on both sides of the aisle need to be "called out" when voters "see the blatant hypocrisy, see the blatant lies."

As of early Wednesday afternoon, Trump had secured 292 votes in the Electoral College, well surpassing the 270 he needed to win his bid for re-election. He won the presidency by expanding on his performance in 2016, when he shocked conventional political wisdom by emerging victorious in the so-called "blue wall" states of Wisconsin, Michigan and Pennsylvania. He swept them once again Tuesday.

"I don't care what your political party is," Sorbo explained. "You see the destruction that Washington, D.C., has done around this country and around the world as well. We need to find a path to truth. We need to walk the road less traveled with Jesus and make that road a super highway, is what I say."
