

L.A. Ministry Leaders Give Update Amid Blazing Fire

In the middle of the heart-wrenching fires that have wiped out homes in California, L.A. ministry leaders have given an update on how they and their families are doing during this sensitive time.

In a video shared on Facebook, L.A. Marzulli gave his update on how he is fairing right now.

"I'm here overlooking the Pacific Ocean, and I'm in the Santa Monica mountains at a friend's house. We just drove down; we're kind of keeping an eye on things," he says.

At the time of posting the video, Marzulli says the winds had died down some. However, he says the winds near his home had at one point reached between 60-80 miles per hour.

"Five or six days ago, they were spraying chem trails over the Santa Monica mountains, exactly the same way that happened way back in 2018 where we lost our home. Some people were saying there's a tie in to the fires in Hawaii; I don't know."

Marzulli says it's troubling to see how many homes have been lost in these fires. Right now, he is without power, with the hope of having it turned back on sometime today.

Five-Fold Church leader, Kathryn Krick, also gave an update on Instagram about the fires, along with a prayer for those feeling anxious during these times.
