

Leaked Documents Confirm China's Massive Communist Re-education Concentration Camps

Hundreds of leaked documents are providing evidence that confirms China's communist government is repressing Muslims and other religious minorities on a massive scale.

It's happening in Xinjiang Province in western China where authorities have imprisoned an estimated 1 million people in detention camps.

Beijing claims the camps are for voluntary job training. But the leaked cache of classified documents shows their true purpose is to re-educate and re-train people to obey China's communist system.

U.S. Secretary of State Mike Pompeo told reporters, "Our best analysis that the number of a million is a reasonable number to think about the number of persons that have been over the extended period of time held or detained or wrongfully denied their fundamental human rights."

The leaked documents also show that China is using high-tech surveillance methods to monitor and target people for arrest. They're even being used to predict who would commit a crime in the future.
