

Man Heads to Evacuation Zone to Share 'Hope of Jesus' Ahead of Hurricane Florence

For some, a bad storm is just a good excuse to help others.

Tuesday on "The Daily Briefing," Fox News reporter Todd Piro spoke with a good Samaritan identified only as "Ronnie," who said his trip to Wilmington, North Carolina, for Hurricane Florence marks the third massive storm he's braved to help the local homeless population.

He previously traveled to New Orleans in 2005 for Hurricane Katrina, and he also helped out in his home town of Myrtle Beach, South Carolina, when Hurricane Hugo ripped through the coastal city in the 1989. {eo}
