

Mark Driscoll Makes Comeback, Launches New Website

Mark Driscoll is marching forward, moving beyond Mars Hill Church by launching .

The site acts as a history of sorts for Driscoll, with access to his sermon series and blogs, as well as the online home of the Driscolls' ministry. Those who sign up are given access to exclusive content.

According to the site, the website was built in response to those still seeking Driscoll family wisdom. "Our prayer is that these resources will help non-Christians meet Jesus and help Christians become more like Jesus," the site reads, "because as Pastor Mark says, 'It's all about Jesus!' "

Driscoll is known for his senior role at Mars Hill Church, where he resigned in October following some controversy.

"I readily acknowledge I am an imperfect messenger of the gospel of Jesus Christ. There are many things I have confessed and repented of, privately and publicly, as you are well aware. Specifically, I have confessed to past pride, anger and a domineering spirit," Driscoll wrote in his resignation letter. "

Since that time, Mars Hill Church has also disbanded, with the final sermon preached by Rick Warren.
