

Millions of Iranians Committed to 'Final Battle' for Iran

Now in its 17th day, the fight continues by millions of Iranians to overthrow the Islamic Republic of Iran. Protesters are calling out for the West to help, and especially, President Trump.

Despite a nearly total Internet blackout for days, foreign militias enlisted to fight the protesters, and live ammunition on the streets, Iranians continue to fill cities throughout Iran, such as Isfahan and Tehran, with their cry for freedom and a plea to the West.

Juliana Taimoorazy, founder and president of the Iraqi Christian Relief Council, described the cry of the protesters: "Please come and help us. The next few hours are critical. Their eyes are on Israel. Their eyes are on America. They're begging, they're pleading with us to assist."

Most protesters are looking for that assistance from President Trump. On Monday, the president imposed a 25-percent tariff on nations that trade with Iran, with more options on the table.

He is scheduled to meet with advisors on Tuesday to determine the next steps for the U.S. after the State Department issued a warning for Americans in Iran to "leave now."

White House Press Secretary Karoline Leavitt explained, "Diplomacy is always the first option for the president. He's told all of you last night that what you're hearing publicly from the Iranian regime is quite different from the messages the administration is receiving privately, and I think the president has an interest in exploring those messages. However, with that said, the president has shown he's unafraid to use military options, if and when he deems necessary. And nobody knows that better than Iran."

Iran claims it is ready for talks with the U.S. based on "mutual respect," but some warn that the regime is simply buying time to brutally crush the protests. Reports from inside the country indicate that the death toll is staggering.

Iranian-American journalist Karmel Melamed told CBN News, "My sources have been telling me it's a slaughterhouse. There are rivers of blood. That's what my source has been telling me, in Tehran alone," he said, and added, "A lot of regime forces have been perched on top of buildings, and in many cases, mowing down people from above. Snipers from inside of buildings have been shooting protesters."

The mosques, Melamed reports, have become flashpoints.
