Ancient Site Reveals Hidden Treasure Linked to Ten Commandments

As history continues to be unearthed through archaeological excavations, the Bible is re-proven true and historically accurate when artifacts are discovered.

This also includes the impact Christianity has had on the development of the West, as many these days try to argue that America was never a Christian nation, even though the ideals, morals and values it was founded on are derived directly from the Bible.

Continuing this pattern of validation hidden in earthly secrets, archaeologists recently discovered a unique marble shrine. Within this shrine they found an ancient relic covered in Christian decorative patterns, and a link back to Moses receiving the Ten Commandments.

Pride Month Goes Out With a Whimper

As a follower of Jesus, I believe in treating every human being with civility and grace. And to be quite specific, I believe in loving my LGBTQ+ neighbor as myself. At the same time, because I care for the greater good of society and believe God's ways are best, I oppose many of the goals of LGBTQ+ activism. That's why I was glad to see a much more diminished version of Pride Month in 2024. The pushback, which I have been expecting for years, continues to grow.

Last year, things were so over the top and in your face that the longtime gay ally Piers Morgan asked, "Have we gone rainbow crazy or is pride month more important than patriotism?" And in response to a challenge from a gay comedian, Morgan answered, "I'm not triggered by a rainbow flag. I'm triggered by the fact that everywhere that I go for a month everything has to be a rainbow flag."

Also last year, things got so extreme with Target's "tuck" bathing suits for males who identified as females (including children) that Joe Rogan commented, "... hey, that's not normal."
