

New Disney+ Teen Series 'Pauline' Pushing Romance with Hell, Satan

The Disney that once brought wholesome, family-oriented entertainment to millions across the globe has been replaced with an organization aimed at influencing children and young people with radical, woke messaging.

Not content at pushing hyper-sexualized material at children, Disney has announced a new series for their streaming platform in which a teenage girl falls in love with none other than the lord of the underworld, Satan.

The series "Pauline" focuses on an 18-year-old girl who gets pregnant after a one-night stand.

Not exactly a run-of-the-mill episode of The Mickey Mouse Club, is it?

Her midnight rendezvous, Lukas, turns out to be the devil in disguise, and why not? This new satanically-driven series is being brought to the world by the same group that created Netflix's "How to Sell Drugs Online (Fast)."

"For a long time, the series has been and still remains a project very close to our hearts," said Executive Producers Philipp Käßbohrer and Matthias Murmann.

If a show about Satan impregnating an 18-year-old girl is close to a person's heart, not only do they need deliverance before they end up meeting him face to face, but parents need to recognize the red flag—practically on fire at this point—and keep their children and teenagers away from this type of content.

Currently, the show is only slated to appear on Disney+ in Germany, a test run of sorts to see how it is received in that increasingly secular nation.

Parents should not drop their guard in the slightest however, as much of the programming on Disney+ in America is filled with the occult, witchcraft, LGBTQ propaganda and other spiritually destructive material.

This new series is sadly not the first show that a Disney-owned company has released with the devil as the protagonist.

As Charisma News reported, the cable television channel FXX, owned by the Disney corporation, released the animated show "Little Demon" where the show's focus is a woman, voiced by "Parks and Rec" alum Aubrey Plaza, who was impregnated by Satan, voiced by Danny DeVito. This leads to their daughter, the Antichrist in the show called 'Chrissy,' to go on a series of adventures to discover how to live life as Satan's daughter.

As expected, many have taken issue with the adult, and heretical, subject matter of "Pauline". The group One Million Moms issued an "urgent warning" regarding the show's nudity, profanity, explicit graphic violence and how the show "makes light of hell and the dangers of the demonic realm."

These are the types of shows that Disney is trying to get children and young adults to watch. This is the type of programming that evil spiritual forces want to get out to the world so that it continues the desensitization to the true dangers in dancing with the devil and the eternal judgement that comes with it.

Satan is not a laughing matter.

He's succeeding more than ever in his original and greatest deception over generations—fooling the gullible into believing he does not exist.

He wants to take every human soul on earth with him to the bowels of hell, and he is not stupid. He has been manipulating humanity for thousands of years. It is up to Christian parents to recognize these attempts at seducing their children away from the Lord and raise them up with a solid foundation in the Word of God. {eoa}
