

New US-Iran Talks Scheduled This Week as Israel is on Highest Alert

The next round of talks is scheduled for this week, pushing off the probability of a U.S. attack for at least a few days. Meanwhile, Tucker Carlson's interview with U.S. Ambassador to Israel Mike Huckabee continues to reverberate.

President Trump's envoys, Steve Witkoff and Jared Kushner, are due to meet with Iran's Foreign Minister Abbas Araghchi on Thursday in Geneva for a third round of talks.

Witkoff suggests the president is puzzled that Iran hasn't agreed yet.

He stated, "Why, under this sort of pressure, with the amount of sea power, naval power that we have over there, why they have come to us and said, we profess that we don't wanna be, we don't want a weapon, so here's what we're prepared to do, and yet it's hard to, sort of, get them to that place."

President Trump is said to be considering "preliminary limited strikes" to force Iran into a deal, as the U.S. has gathered masses of firepower in the Middle East.

Israel is on its highest alert, prepared for an Iranian attack, if the U.S. goes ahead with attacking Iran. Israel has also been attacking Hezbollah targets in Lebanon, as both Hezbollah and the Houthis would likely participate in a war.

Iranian President Masoud Pezeshkian vowed that Iran will not yield to external pressure, while Iran's state news agency reported that students protested at several universities following 40-day memorials for those killed in protests last month.

Visiting U.S. Congressman Andy Ogles (R-Tennessee) told CBN News that regime changes need to be organic.

“What we’ve seen over the last few weeks is that the Persian people, the people of Iran, want change. They want their country back. And so, I think there’s the opportunity for the United States to create that window for the Persian people to, you know, assume their own destiny. But it has to be from the Persian people, the people of Iran, and, you know, no new American boots on the ground,” Ogles said.

He believes a change would revolutionize Iran, the Middle East, and even the world.

“They are the number one funder of terror, Hamas, Houthis, Hezbollah, etc.,” Ogles explained. “They destabilize regions all over, countries all over the world. And it’ll be a huge shift, and quite frankly, opens up the opportunity, at least for peace, globally, once Iran is no longer in the picture, and quite frankly, their global network of terror.”
