

North Korea Fires Ballistic Missile

North Korea fired one ballistic missile from Pyongsong, a city in South Pyongan Province, at around 1817 GMT over the sea between South Korea and Japan, South Korea's Joint Chiefs of Staff said on Wednesday.

South Korea and the United States are currently analyzing what type of missile North Korea was fired, the military said in a text.

Minutes after the North fired the missile, South Korea's military conducted a missile-firing test in response to the provocation, the South Korean military added. {eoa}
